Preservation and Archiving Techniques

Preserving Mt. Tabor Historical Society photos requires meticulous care and advanced archiving techniques to ensure their longevity and accessibility for future generations. The society employs a range of preservation methods tailored to the age and condition of each photograph.

Physical Preservation Methods

Physical preservation involves controlling environmental conditions such as temperature, humidity, and light exposure to prevent deterioration. Photographs are stored in acid-free folders and archival-quality boxes to protect them from chemical damage and physical wear. Regular condition assessments are conducted to identify and address potential preservation issues.

Digital Archiving and Restoration

To enhance accessibility and safeguard originals, many of the Mt. Tabor Historical Society photos have been digitized. High-resolution scanning enables the creation of digital copies that can be used for research and exhibition purposes without handling the physical prints. Additionally, digital restoration techniques correct fading, scratches, and other damage, improving the clarity and usability of the images.

Cataloging and Metadata Management

Each photograph in the collection is cataloged with detailed metadata, including date, location, subject matter, and photographer information when available. This systematic approach facilitates efficient searching and retrieval, supporting both scholarly work and public inquiries.
