Origins of National Family History Month

National Family History Month was established in 2001, following a resolution passed by the U.S. Congress. The month was intended to promote the importance of genealogy and family history research, encouraging people to document their family stories and to appreciate their heritage. The initiative is supported by various genealogical societies, historical organizations, and family history advocates across the country.

The month coincides with other events and observances related to family, history, and culture, such as the celebration of National Hispanic Heritage Month, which runs from September 15 to October 15, and the National Archives' Family History Day. This timing further emphasizes the importance of family and cultural connections within the broader context of American society.
