Character Analysis

Understanding the characters in Obsession is crucial for evaluating the film's overall message and the potential impact on younger viewers.

Sarah

Sarah is portrayed as a relatable and ambitious young woman. Her character is initially depicted as innocent and naive, making her an easy target for David's charm. As the film progresses, Sarah's transformation from a passive participant to an empowered individual showcases the struggle many face when confronted with toxic relationships.

David

David, the male lead, represents a complex character whose charm masks a deeply troubled psyche. His obsession with Sarah escalates throughout the film, driving the plot forward and serving as a cautionary tale about the dangers of unhealthy relationships. His unpredictable behavior raises significant red flags, making him a classic example of the "obsessive lover" trope.

For parents considering whether to allow their children to watch Obsession, several content concerns should be taken into account:

Violence

The film contains several scenes that depict violence, including:

- Physical Altercations: There are moments where characters engage in physical fights, which may be distressing for younger viewers.

- Profanity: Several characters use foul language in moments of anger or frustration.
