1. The 1965 Trade: Steve Barber and Company

In 1965, the Orioles traded pitchers Steve Barber and a few other players to the Cardinals in exchange for future Hall of Famer, outfielder Curt Flood. Although this trade did not pan out as expected for the Orioles, it highlighted the tension and changes in player rights that were brewing during that era.

2. The 1988 Exchange: Joe Orsulak for Leon Durham

In 1988, the Orioles sent outfielder Joe Orsulak to the Cardinals in exchange for first baseman Leon Durham. This trade represented a swap of players who were looking for fresh starts.
