Types of Business Ownership

To understand the different terms used for business owners, it is essential to recognize the various types of business structures. Each structure has its own implications for ownership, liability, and taxation.

Sole Proprietorship

A sole proprietorship is the simplest form of business ownership, where one individual owns and operates the business. The owner is personally liable for all debts and obligations. Common traits include:

1. Full control over business decisions.
2. All profits go directly to the owner.
3. Minimal regulatory requirements.

Partnership

A partnership involves two or more individuals who agree to share the profits and responsibilities of a business. There are several types of partnerships:

- General Partnership: All partners share equal responsibility and liability.
- Limited Partnership: One or more partners have limited liability and do not participate in day-to-day operations.
- Limited Liability Partnership (LLP): Similar to a general partnership, but with some protection against personal liability.

Corporation

A corporation is a more complex business structure that is legally separate from its owners. This means that shareholders (owners) are not personally liable for the corporation's debts. Within this structure, you may encounter:

- Private Corporation: Owned by a small group of investors and not publicly traded.
- Public Corporation: Shares are sold to the public on stock exchanges, allowing for large investments.

Limited Liability Company (LLC)

An LLC combines elements of both partnerships and corporations. Owners, known as members, have limited personal liability for business debts. Characteristics include:

1. Flexible management structure.
2. Pass-through taxation, avoiding double taxation.
3. Protection against personal liability for business debts.
