Understanding Parallel Structure in Writing

Parallel structure, also known as parallelism, refers to the use of consistent grammatical forms within a sentence or series of sentences. This technique involves matching parts of speech, verb tenses, or sentence elements to create a harmonious and balanced sentence. In writing, parallel structure improves the flow and readability, making ideas easier to follow and more persuasive. The parallel structure worksheet rewriting the sentences answer key specifically targets this aspect of grammar by providing exercises that require rewriting sentences to ensure parallelism. Mastery of parallel structure is essential for academic writing, professional communication, and creative writing alike.

Definition and Importance

Parallelism occurs when components in a sentence that are joined by coordinating conjunctions such as "and," "or," or "but" share the same grammatical form. This consistency helps to emphasize related ideas and maintain rhythm. For example, a sentence like "She likes hiking, swimming, and to ride a bicycle" lacks parallel structure because the last item is an infinitive phrase, not a gerund like the first two. Rewriting it as "She likes hiking, swimming, and riding a bicycle" corrects the parallelism. Such clarity is why parallel structure is a fundamental concept in grammar education and why worksheets focusing on rewriting sentences to achieve parallelism are widely used.
