Biblical Foundation of Partakers of the Divine Nature

The phrase partakers of the divine nature primarily originates from the New Testament, specifically 2 Peter 1:4, which states that believers are given "exceedingly great and precious promises" that enable them to become partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption in the world caused by sinful desires. This passage serves as a cornerstone scripture for understanding the concept, highlighting the believer's transformation through God's promises and power.

Scriptural Context and Meaning

In the biblical context, being partakers of the divine nature does not imply that humans become gods by essence but that they share in God's moral attributes, such as holiness, love, and righteousness. This sharing is made possible through the incarnation of Christ and the work of the Holy Spirit, which sanctify believers and enable them to reflect God's character in their lives. The concept emphasizes participation rather than possession, focusing on relational and moral transformation.

Old Testament Roots

While the explicit phrase appears in the New Testament, the idea has roots in the Old Testament, where God's people are called to be holy as He is holy (Leviticus 11:44-45). This call to holiness sets the stage for the New Testament understanding that believers are invited into a divine fellowship, reflecting God's nature in their conduct and character.

Theological Interpretations

The doctrine of partakers of the divine nature has been interpreted and developed differently within various Christian traditions. These interpretations explore how divine nature is imparted, its effects on believers, and its relationship to salvation and sanctification.

Eastern Orthodox Perspective

In Eastern Orthodox theology, the concept is closely related to the doctrine of theosis, or deification, where believers are called to become gods by grace, sharing in the divine energies of God without altering God's essence. Theosis is understood as the ultimate goal of the Christian life, involving a transformative union with God that restores the image and likeness lost through sin.

Western Christian Views

Western Christianity, including Roman Catholicism and Protestantism, generally emphasizes sanctification as the process by which believers grow in holiness and reflect God's character. The partaking of the divine nature is seen as an impartation of grace that enables moral renewal and spiritual growth, though it stops short of the ontological transformation emphasized in Eastern Orthodoxy.

Reformed Theology

Within Reformed traditions, the phrase is often understood in the context of union with Christ, whereby believers receive justification and sanctification through faith. The divine nature is imparted through the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, which renews the believer's heart and enables a godly life.

Practical Implications for Believers

Understanding oneself as a partaker of the divine nature carries significant practical implications for daily Christian living, spiritual growth, and ethical conduct.

Transformation of Character

Believers are called to manifest the attributes of God such as love, patience, kindness, and holiness. This transformation is evidence of their participation in the divine nature and serves as a witness to the world of God's work within them.

Empowerment for Holy Living

Participation in the divine nature empowers believers to overcome sin and resist worldly corruption. It is through this divine enablement that believers pursue righteousness and exhibit spiritual fruitfulness.

Assurance and Hope

The promise of partaking in the divine nature provides believers with assurance of salvation and hope for eternal life. It affirms their identity in Christ and the certainty of their ultimate transformation into God's likeness.

List: Key Practices for Living as Partakers of the Divine Nature

- Prayer and Communion with God
- Regular Study and Meditation on Scripture
- Participation in the Sacraments or Ordinances
- Active Engagement in Christian Community
- Obedience to God's Moral Commands
- Service and Love Toward Others

Sanctification and Divine Nature

Sanctification is the process by which believers are progressively made holy, aligning more closely with the divine nature. This process is integral to the experience of partakers of the divine nature.

Positional and Progressive Sanctification

Positional sanctification refers to the believer's status as set apart in Christ at salvation, while progressive sanctification is the ongoing transformation of the believer's character. Both aspects highlight how divine nature influences the believer's life.

Role of the Holy Spirit

The Holy Spirit plays a central role in sanctification by indwelling believers, renewing their minds, and producing spiritual fruit. This divine presence is essential for believers to genuinely partake of the divine nature.

Grace and Eternal Life

Grace is the unmerited favor of God that initiates and sustains the believer's relationship with the divine nature. It is through grace that the promises enabling believers to become partakers of the divine nature are realized.

Grace as Foundation for Divine Participation

Without grace, the transformation implied by partaking in the divine nature would be impossible. Grace is the means by which God imparts His life to believers, enabling them to live in accordance with His will.

Connection to Eternal Life

Partaking of the divine nature is not only about present transformation but also about the promise of eternal life. Believers look forward to a complete and permanent sharing in God's nature in the life to come, fulfilling the hope of resurrection and eternal fellowship with God.
