Identifying these challenges is crucial for setting the stage for therapy and allows for targeted discussion.

3. Goals for Therapy

Setting clear goals can make therapy more effective. This section should encourage individuals to reflect on what they want to achieve. Goals can be categorized as:

- Short-term Goals: Achievable within a few sessions (e.g., managing anxiety in social situations).
- Long-term Goals: More extensive objectives (e.g., developing healthier relationships).

By clearly defining these goals, individuals can work collaboratively with their therapist to create a roadmap for progress.

4. Emotions and Thoughts

Understanding one's emotions and thoughts is integral to the therapeutic process. This section should prompt individuals to jot down their current emotional state and any recurring thoughts. Questions to consider include:

- What emotions have I been feeling lately?
- Are there specific triggers for these emotions?
- What thoughts do I have about these emotions?

Exploring these reflections can lead to deeper insights during therapy sessions.

5. Previous Therapy Experiences

For those who have previously engaged in therapy, reflecting on past experiences can be beneficial. This section can include:

Understanding prior experiences can inform current therapy and help individuals communicate their needs more effectively.
