Open Communication

- Addressing Issues Directly: Instead of ignoring someone, try to open a dialogue about the issues at hand. This can lead to resolution and understanding.
- Setting Boundaries: Clearly communicate personal boundaries if the relationship is causing discomfort, allowing both parties to understand each other's needs.

Seeking Support

- Involve a Neutral Third Party: In cases of conflict, seeking the help of a mediator can provide a safe space for both parties to express their feelings.
- Lean on Friends or Colleagues: Confiding in trusted friends or colleagues can provide perspective and emotional support while navigating complex situations.

Self-Reflection
